

Early Journal Content on JSTOR, Free to Anyone in the World

This article is one of nearly 500,000 scholarly works digitized and made freely available to everyone in the world by JSTOR.

Known as the Early Journal Content, this set of works include research articles, news, letters, and other writings published in more than 200 of the oldest leading academic journals. The works date from the mid-seventeenth to the early twentieth centuries.

We encourage people to read and share the Early Journal Content openly and to tell others that this resource exists. People may post this content online or redistribute in any way for non-commercial purposes.

Read more about Early Journal Content at <http://about.jstor.org/participate-jstor/individuals/early-journal-content>.

JSTOR is a digital library of academic journals, books, and primary source objects. JSTOR helps people discover, use, and build upon a wide range of content through a powerful research and teaching platform, and preserves this content for future generations. JSTOR is part of ITHAKA, a not-for-profit organization that also includes Ithaka S+R and Portico. For more information about JSTOR, please contact support@jstor.org.

to a prominent murder case now attracting the attention of the whole country and might well be read in connection with one or two similar cases which have just been ended. The irony of this paper is only equalled by the force and strength with which the writer presents the subject.

George B. Davis, Judge Advocate General of the United States Army, has an address on "Recent Progress in International Law," which is instructive and valuable.

These addresses, with the reports of the committees, make the present volume one of unusual interest.

"Studies in Constitutional Law." Regulation of Commerce in the Federal Constitution. By Thomas H. Calvert. Annotator of the Constitution in Federal Statutes Annotated. Edward Thompson Company. Northport, Long Island, New York. 1907. Price $3.00.

No volume in these admirable studies in Constitutional Law could be more timely either to the student or the practitioner, than this work of Mr. Calvert. It is the third in a series of which other volumes are in preparation and each volume seems to be prepared not only with the utmost care but in such shape as to make the matter as entertaining as it is instructive.

At no time in the history of this country has the Federal regulation of commerce been so under discussion. The secular press as well as the legal periodicals are filled with articles upon or references to, this subject and the recommendations of the Executive head of the Government and the action of the Congress during its last two terms have brought the matter to the front in a most marked degree. This book, therefore, is one needed and apt to invite attention, and its presentation by the author is clear and succinct and shows the result of careful examination, discrimination and legal research. Written in a pleasing style, with full and ready references, we know of no book which both to the layman and the lawyer affords more valuable information upon this subject than this volume which Mr. Calvert has just submitted to the public under the imprint of the Edward Thompson Company. We can heartily recommend it to all who may desire to gain the widest information upon this topic, today so much occupying the attention of the public.

The mechanical work, like that of the two preceding volumes, is excellent. The print is large and generous, the paper excellent, and this together with the binding makes it a book pleasant to hold and to read.